Statewide Poll Says Voters Favor Education Spending Over “No New Taxes”

While North Carolinians don't want higher taxes, a recent poll reveals that they are in favor of tax increases to support education initiatives for the state's pre-kindergarten children.

The poll released in May found bi-partisan support by North Carolina's voters to increase Smart Start to it's full funding level of $300 million. This was the first poll conducted in the state focusing on attitudes toward early childhood care and education by registered voters. Pre-K Now paid for the poll.

Conducted over four days in April, the poll surveyed 609 registered voters who were randomly selected and has a margin of error of plus/minus 4.1%. Some of the insights into the mindset of Tar Heel voters include support for the Smart Start program by 81% of respondents and 77% seeing state funded pre-kindergarten as important for low-income families. With politicians opposing new taxes to maintain funding levels and cutting programs to balance budgets, maybe one of the more important findings was that 66% of voters favor ensuring that there is sufficient funding for needs such as education versus 27% that favored holding the line on taxes. "North Carolinians have always valued young children and have supported Smart Start because the work we do helps children and the people who love and teach them," said Karen Ponder, President of the North Carolina Partnership for Children, Inc., the state Smart Start office.

The poll also gave insight into the priorities or complaints of North Carolina's voters. Of those surveyed, 60 % believe children begin to learn at birth, 76% believe half or fewer children enter kindergarten with the skills they need and 57% believe the state is doing too little to make sure children enter kindergarten ready. Maybe more telling for legislators facing re-election was the attitude of 59% of respondents who said they were MORE likely to support a legislator who votes to expand early education programs.

Ashley Thrift, Board Chair of the North Carolina Partnership for Children, Inc., said that he hoped these numbers would encourage members of the General Assembly to expand Smart Start funding.

"Smart Start has seen significant cuts three of the past four years. Local Smart Start partnerships need additional funds to meet the increasing demand. The children in our state and the working families who care for them depend on Smart Start," he added.

In the past four budget cycles, Smart Start has received three years of cuts, followed by one year of steady funding.

Prevent the Spread of E. coli with Safety Measures

There have been several cases of E. coli confirmed in North Carolina recently. Child care providers can prevent the spread of this bacteria by following simple tips for prevention.

There are hundreds of strains of E. coli in existence. Most are harmless, but there is one strain that is a powerful toxin and can cause severe illness.

E. coli is spread through water and food that has been contaminated. Some of the likely foods are ground beef, sprouts, lettuce, unpasteurized milk and juice.

Young toddlers with E. coli can easily spread the infection if they experience diarrhea. Other symptoms include abdominal cramps, but usually no fever.

Most people infected with E. coli recover in 5-10 days.

The spread of E. coli can be prevented by storing raw meat separate from ready-to-eat food. Cook raw food, especially ground beef, thoroughly. Drink pasteurized milk and juice. Wash hands thoroughly after toileting or diapering and before eating.

In a child care facility, hands should be thoroughly washed and diapers and soiled clothes should be kept out of children's reach.

Everyone should wash their hands upon entering a child care facility to avoid bringing the bacteria in from outside.

Run for the Money Yields $1,400 for Partnership

Another Run for the Money has passed, and the Partnership ran away with $1,436.40 in May from the Community Foundation of Gaston County.

Board member Billy Marsh raced off after the money for the Partnership and staff members manned a booth that provided information about our organization to the community. A little girl representing the Partnership also participated in the karaoke contest.

This year marked the third year that the Community Foundation of Gaston County sponsored the event for the third year. Plans are already underway for what adventures lie ahead for Buck, the event mascot, next year. The Partnership thanks everyone that participated or made a donation in our behalf.

Childcare Providers, Partnership Staff and Board Member Visit

Executive Director Sherry Browning, a board member and local childcare providers attended key childhood lobbying events this spring in Raleigh.

On April 19 Browning, board chair Martha Burris, Kenlin Academy Director Annie Geerken and Christy Tomberlin and Cline Learning Centers Scott Cline participated in Keep the Promise Day. On May 3

Browning and Ashbrook Bows and Arrows Center Director Allesia Audrey attended Tuesday for Tots day. Both events provided opportunities to visit with legislative members and express concern about early childhood education funding. Currently, the Senate has passed a bill maintaining Smart Start funding at last year's level. A similar bill is still pending in the House.

Need help finding child

We can help you in your search!
